Shows That City Growth Is Sure and Substantial.

There Are 32,557 Persons Em ployed in Manufacturing Plants. Interesting Table of Facts.

Richmond's trade record for the year 1912 presents no phenomenal out-bursts of industry, nor any extraorlinary developments. The story is the same one of substantial growth that has been told each recurring New Year's Day for the past twelve years. The increased sales of both jobbing and manufacturing houses are larger han the average annual increases iuring the yers 1900-1910, but the percentage of increase is slightly less, howing conclusively that industrial levelopment moves along by arithmetical instead of geometrical progression.

The combined sales of the city's manufacturing and jobbing houses reached $179,507,243, according to the figures compiled by J. H. Whitty, of the Improved Mercantile Agency. Of this sum, $101,209,493 may be attributed to manufactures and $78,297,750 to wholesale houses. The increase of these figures over those for 1911 is $10,340,653.

While Richmond ranks high among Southern cities in the amount of its banking business as shown by clearing house statements, it does not present as imposing an array of figures as do some other cities. Different clearing houses have different methods of computing totals, and the rank of any particular city is only approximated by the standing assigned it by its annual clearings. The American Hankers' Association is even now attempting to devise some method of uniformity in clearing house systems. It has been said that Atlanta, which
